Co-Location: Coming Together for One-Stop-Shop

The offices of Research and Sponsored Programs and Sponsored Programs Administration are now collocated in one building on campus. Jeff Thompson, Associate Provost for Research explains, “Having a one-stop shop for grant management from creation of ideas to submission of proposals, to administration of grants, will be of great use to faculty. In the past, it’s been confusing in terms of who should develop a contract and prepare the budget, is it pre-award or is it post-award? Now, we’re in one location, so I think that will be very useful.”

Campus community can now find numerous granting resources all in one convenient location. Collocated resources available in the new offices (located in the old OTTC building) include assistance in initially finding funding opportunities, building and sharing research objectives, creating budgets, submitting proposals, orientations for managing awards, negotiating final budgets, collecting cost share/match, arranging release time, submitting reports, and reconciling or closing the award.

In addition, campus community will find resources for research compliance issues housed mere steps away in the building next door, where they can receive IRB training and certification in the use of human subjects, animal subjects, radiation, radioactive materials, and/or bio-hazardous materials.

Dr. Jeff Thompson, Associate Provost for Research
Finally, due to open in a few months, the Office of Student Research (OSR) will be a resource available to help support and promote undergraduate and graduate student research activities.

Still offering the same services to campus, pre and post award will continue to serve as liaison to funding agencies and provide the same support to faculty but perhaps with an improved communication between the two entities thanks to closer proximity. “And for us that’s great!” points out University Enterprises, Corporation (UEC) Director of Sponsored Programs Administration, Diane Trujillo. “We can actually tackle issues before they become problems,” prior to proposal submission.

The collocation will also offer more immediate access to expenditure information and make year-end reconciliation and reporting more efficient.

PRE-AWARD

The pre-award team can help get you started on your quest for grant funding. According to Director Shimakawa, “The more we know about your research aspirations, the more we can help you.”

Initially, faculty may meet with grant development officers in order to help narrow down their search for research funding opportunities. Why waste your time looking for funding in the wrong places? Let their collective experience assist you in determining whether you are looking for funding opportunities in the appropriate division or directorate of the appropriate institute or agency. In addition, the university provides faculty access to research funding opportunity search engines. Pre-award can help you set up a user-profile and establish key-word searches or email notifications that will utilize your search time most efficiently. The Office of Research and Sponsored Programs offer workshops on finding and using these resources each fall.

Once you have found an opportunity for which you’d like to apply, grant development officers are in a position to make suggestions and can help you develop your ideas. As Shimakawa elaborates, “We can listen to your project ideas and suggest budget items such as how many hours it sounds to us that you’ll need in release time or if you’d benefit from a post-doc assisting you. We can put it into real terms – undergrads, grads, post-docs, collaborators, consultants, external evaluators – so PI’s can determine how best to plan and allocate.”

The pre-award team also has access to salary information, fringe benefits rates, and current federally negotiated indirect rates. According to Shimakawa, budgets can be drafted fairly quickly for review and revision and that efficient turn-around allows for faculty members to determine immediately if they are over or under budget. The Director states, “Building a budget is something that a faculty member should not have to worry about.”

In addition to helping find opportunities and building project ideas and budgets, grant development officers can put faculty members in touch with other CSUSB peers with similar research objectives. Shimakawa explains, “We work with all departments and all fields of study. We are aware of campus-wide research efforts and are thus in a position to make suggestions and introduce potential collaborators.” Thanks to cultivated relationships throughout the community, grant development officers can also help find external collaborators at K-12 institutions and/or local community colleges. Just because you’re new or lack community connections at this time, don’t let that dissuade you from trying. Director Shimakawa is assured that pre-award is in a position to help you.

“We can help them with all the little pieces so they can concentrate on their science,” Shimakawa states. According to the pre-award specialist, the grant-proposal narrative “is the most important and most compelling part of the proposal. If we can give a faculty member another twelve to twenty-four hours to make that shine, then that is a win for us!”

If we can give a faculty member another twelve to twenty-four hours to make that [narrative] shine, then that is a win for us!

POST-AWARD

Upon receipt of an award, you will be assigned to work with one member of the team of University Enterprises, Corporation (UCE) Research Administrators, depending on his/her availability and experience. Once you have been assigned an RA, that working relationship will carry through to your other funded projects (regardless of funding agency). Director Trujillo wants faculty to have confidence in knowing that their grants will be administered with as much continuity as possible.

Post-award administration will provide faculty with a detailed orientation upon an award and RA’s will go over your pending budget line-by-line. Should, for example, a budget-negotiation be warranted, Trujillo states “We’ll contact the agency if there is a problem . We will handle the whole process for you and send notifications to the award agencies on your behalf.”

Research Administrators serve as the liaison between the funding agency and the project investigator/faculty member. For example, they are able to assist you in: sending out monthly statements; making budget modifications as needed; preparing release time and effort reporting; making projections using statistical methodology; and researching/reconciling any indirect cost issues. Additionally, whether you are working alone, with graduate students or with outside collaborators, RA’s are able to guide you through the Human Resources, Accounting, and Payroll processes.

Director Trujillo wants to assure faculty, “We help you. We guide you through that bureaucratic process… through accounting, through payroll, through HR. We will help faculty to spend their money as budgeted and adhere to the agency regulations, using the correct forms.” Faculty can have confidence in knowing they are not alone in this process and that the RA’s have the experience and knowledge to navigate them successfully through.

According to Trujillo, there are some programmatic issues, such as direct requests for program reports, that the project director is responsible for but the assigned RA can assist and track your project as it progresses. Trujillo explains, “We keep everything in a comprehensive file here along with all the fiscal activity on the award.” This effective record keeping makes it much easier for faculty to compile and prepare final project reports and RA’s to close and reconcile the award.

GOOD AT WHAT WE DO

Director of Research & Sponsored Programs, Ellen Shimakawa wants to encourage faculty to utilize the many resources offered by this collocation, “We are very good at what we do,” states the pre-award specialist. “Although we are actually in the middle (around 14th) among the CSU’s in size, we are within the top 5th-6th grant-getting institutions in the system.” She smilingly adds, “Maybe because we’re a little more aggressive!”

Faculty should also keep in mind that we are a Minority Serving Institution, as well as a Hispanic Serving Institution, and according to Shimakawa, in some cases there is set aside funding for such institutions that are not research intensive. Pre- and post-award teams are well aware of these programs and very knowledgeable about their requirements.

Both pre- and post-award teams take pride in being able to work with very tight deadlines and negotiate successfully through stringent guidelines. According to Director Trujillo, there is no need for faculty to fear working with these government agencies, “It can be intimidating but we will work them through that process…we’re here to help.”

“ It can be intimidating but we will work them through that process…we’re here to help! ”

Diane Trujillo, Director, Sponsored Programs Administration
Meet the Team!

Jeff Thompson (Associate Provost for Research) Jeff has his B.S. in Physics and his Ph.D. in Molecular Biophysics. Serving as leader of the pre- and post-award teams, Jeff is also the campus Research Integrity Officer. All of the research compliance committees are housed administratively in the Office of Academic Research (IRB, IACUC, Radiation Safety, Biosafety) and are under his purview.

Michael L. Gillespie (Admin. Analyst Specialist/IRB Coordinator) Michael has a B.S. in Information Management, an M.P.A. in Public Administration, and an M.A. in National Security Studies program—all from CSUSB. He assists the Provost for Research in promoting faculty research development both through internal funding and external funding support. He is also the IRB Coordinator and Compliance person for the Institutional Review Board ensuring the protection of human participants research conducted on the CSUSB campus and for faculty projects off campus.

Dawn Pitts (Administrative Assistant) Dawn has a strong background in customer service, accounting and office management. Before joining the post-award team, Dawn worked in human resources and accounts payable, serving as liaison to a diverse population of governmental agencies. Those experiences are invaluable as Dawn is able to provide immediate guidance and assistance to our many internal and external clients.

PRE-Award

Ellen Shimakawa (Director, Research and Sponsored Programs/Grant Development Officer) -- Ellen has a Ph.D. in genetics and was a full professor of Biology. She has been a PI/PD on a number of major NIH, NSF, HUD, and Department of Education programs, a NIH Extramural Fellow, and is a regular study group/peer review panelist for those agencies.

Rachel Weiss (Grant Development Officer) -- Rachel has her Ph.D. in organizational behavior and research methods. She has extensive expertise and experience in program evaluation, higher educational institutional research, and in NIH and Title V funded educational research and assessment.

Steve Hull - (Grant Development Officer) -- Steve has a M.S. in Systems Management from USC and a M.S. in Computer Science from Air Force Institute of Technology (AFIT). He has extensive expertise in Department of Defense Programs and government grants as prior Director of the National Center for Excellence in Distance Learning (NCEDL). He has 22 yrs military background in Aviation, Space Guidance Systems, federal contracting, and Base Operations.

Allison Mader (ASC II) – Allison is the organizational core of the ORSP and is a skilled editor of narratives and budget spreadsheets. She reviews and analyzes data to ensure accuracy for the grant officers and project directors. She specializes in development, reporting, auditing, and all of the other critical components of electronic proposal submission. She is responsible for all opportunity communications to faculty and is our Web-master.

Cathleen Lucas (Electronic Proposal Coordinator) – Cathleen has her M.A. in Communication and is responsible for our electronic submissions, office publications, and databases. She is trained and up to date on all of the agency processes and requirements. She will ensure the integrity of the formal submission of grants to federal, state, and local agencies.

POST-Award

Diane Trujillo (Director, Sponsored Programs Administration) – Diane is responsible for the direct supervision of the Sponsored Programs Administration post-award team. With over 19 years of experience in Accounting and Research Administration she possesses a broad knowledge base in all aspects of research administration. Diane earned her B.A. in Public Administration from CSUSB.

Judy Hoosier-Crosson (Research Administrator) – Judy has worked in Sponsored Programs for 10+ years and prior to that she worked in Foundation Payroll for 4 years. With much experience in federal and state regulations, compliance, and budgeting, she is responsible for administering Federal, State, and Local government faculty awards.

Julie Wessel (Research Administrator) – Julie has received her B.A. in Business Administration from CSUSB and has over 20 years experience working in accounting. In addition to her research administration duties, she has served on panels for stipend processing, effort reporting, and faculty overload issues.

Yolanda Meyer (Research Administrator) – Yolanda worked as an Accounts Payable Administrator for the Foundation for 4 years. Prior to that, along with her husband she owned and ran her own Contractor business here in the Inland Empire for over 18 years. Her multifaceted past experiences in reviewing contracts, adhering to budgets, making payroll, managing accounts payable/receivable, and visiting job sites are an asset when negotiating stringent grant administration guidelines.

Kara Smietana (Research Administrator) – Kara earned a B.A. in Anthropology from CSUSB and has previous education and experience in accounting. In addition to assisting faculty with the administration of grants and contracts, she is the forms specialist and guide developer for Sponsored Programs Administration.
CSUSB faculty have again risen to the challenge!
Proposal submissions from the Colleges have increased over last year (173 vs. 155 in 2009/10), and dollars – Total and Indirect – are up this past year, as well:

SPOTLIGHT: Dr. Rueyling Chuang, Communication Studies, received NEH funding for her proposal, “Integrating Area Studies and Humanities Through Faculty Teaching and Learning Communities: Bridging Cultures in an Era of Internationalization and Web 2.0” which seeks to systematically integrate Asian Studies, Latin American Studies, and Arabic Studies, and strategically link these area studies programs which will address the context of globalization, internationalization and new instructional technology powered by Web 2.0, enhanced by activities such as creating our school’s own YouTube channel and podcasting.

The goals of this new humanities initiative are to; (1) promote cultural competency; (2) enhance teaching excellence; (3) expand faculty and student knowledge; (4) establish digital humanities networks that systematically create resources, such as a CSUSB YouTube channel, CSUSB Wikis, and podcasting, for campus and local communities; and (5) reach out to the wider campus community and local communities.

Did you know that the CSU Board of Trustees established the Grant-Related/Specially Funded Instructional Faculty job classification to permit campuses to appoint faculty members with exceptional grants and contracts success to these special appointments? We here at the Office of Research and Sponsored Programs are currently working on a draft of CSUSB’s policy, to provide faculty with guidance on eligibility and application procedures. These appointments provide the campus with a means to recognize exceptional faculty leadership in this area. Please stay tuned!

SPOTLIGHT: Dr. Aaron Moffett, Kinesiology, was successful in obtaining funding from the Paralyzed Veterans Education Foundation to aid in bringing the 4th Annual “DisAbility Sports Festival” to CSUSB, in collaboration with several other entities. The festival is a sports extravaganza for people with disabilities and an educational experience for participants, their families and caregivers, and students and community members. The purposes are: (a) to increase the sport opportunities for athletes with disabilities in the Inland Empire and thus increase their quality of life and health; (b) to educate the public on disability sport and physical activity; (c) to inform participants and their caregivers about services and programs within the area; and (d) to provide a service learning opportunity for CSUSB and other local universities’ students to learn how to develop more sport programs for people with disabilities. At the festival, expert coaches and teachers will teach people with SCI/D in 11 different sports. The 2011 festival athlete, volunteer, and cooperative organization participation numbers will be compared to previous festival numbers. The information learned from this project will be disseminated in local media outlets, national conferences, and a professional journal.

You asked for it – You got it!

Born out of discussions over the past three years with faculty members, CSUSB has created a new Office of Student Research to support and promote undergraduate and graduate student research.

Associate Provost for Research, Jeff Thompson explains, “Faculty, Francisca Beer from Accounting & Finance will be in charge of the new Office of Student Research, which will serve as a clearing house of opportunities for undergraduate and graduate students.”

Early plans for the new center will be to assist students in locating funding opportunities, help support the currently funded STEM programs on campus and oversee a student research competition. A new web site, rich with research resources will be made available to students at the new office and workshops will be conducted for students on research related topics (research ethics, poster preparation, Zotero, etc.)

“We’ve had research support for faculty in the past and now we’ll have support for students, as well” states Thompson.

Look for more information and details of the center on our web sites. Contact information will be coming soon!
